Instructions No. 4169

Difficulty: Beginner

Working time: 20 Minutes

Marbled Easter eggs and candles add an elegant touch to your spring table. The marbling process creates delicate swirls and shimmering effects that make each piece one-of-a-kind. This way, you can quickly enhance wreaths, decorative plates, or small arrangements—even if you're just getting started. The result looks sophisticated and pairs beautifully with natural materials.

How to Make an Easter Wreath with Marbled Eggs:

How to make marbled Easter eggs

First, protect your work surface with a handicraft mat, as marbling can cause fine splashes of paint. Take an old, disused container and check whether the eggs fit inside. Then fill the container with lukewarm tap water. Lukewarm water helps the colour for marbling to spread evenly across the surface, ensuring you get consistent patterns.

Prepare the colours for marbling and test the patterns
Shake the colours for marbling vigorously so that the pigments are well distributed and the metallic effect will show up beautifully later on. Add a few drops to the surface of the water. The paint will float on top, forming a thin film. Now carefully draw lines through the drops of paint using a bamboo skewer. This creates the typical marbling pattern. Start by marbling a piece of notepaper: this is your test run, which you can use to assess colour combinations without ‘wasting’ an egg straight away. If you want to change the pattern, take a new piece of notepaper and use it to skim the remaining paint off the surface of the water. This way, you’ll start with a fresh, clear pattern for each egg.

Dip the eggs and leave them to dry thoroughly
Insert a bamboo skewer into each egg. This allows you to dip the egg into the water carefully, without leaving fingerprints or staining your hands. Add a few more drops of colour for marbling to the surface of the water and use the skewer to draw another pattern. Now slowly dip an egg into the water, turning it gently if necessary, and then lift it out again. Stick the bamboo skewer into a piece of flower arrangement foam to let it dry. This way, the egg doesn’t touch anything and the marbling stays neat. Repeat the process for all the eggs and then leave them to dry thoroughly.

Marbled candles in the same style
Next, marble the candles too, so that the eggs and candles look like a set. Follow the same method: add fresh paint to the water’s surface, draw the pattern with the bamboo skewer and carefully dip the candle in. Then lay or stand the candles so that they can dry without any pressure marks. Allow a little time for this, so that the surface doesn’t become sticky later on and the metallic sheen really comes into its own.

Arrange the Easter wreath on the decorative board
Place some moss around the edge of a decorative board to create a natural frame and give the decoration a grounded look. Place the willow wreath on top. Cut a piece of flower arrangement foam to size and stick it in the centre of the wreath. The flower arrangement foam provides a stable base so that the candle holders and decorations sit securely later on. Then cover it with Iceland moss so that it becomes invisible and the centre looks soft and spring-like.

Insert the candles and secure the eggs decoratively
Insert the candle holders into the flower arrangement foam and place the marbled candles inside them. Now arrange the marbled Easter eggs around the wreath and secure them in place with dots of hot glue. Add a few flowers here and there to liven up the look and really bring out the marbling. Make sure the eggs aren’t too close to the candles.

Finishing touches and enjoying the result Leave everything to dry completely before placing the Easter wreath in its spot. The marbling gives each egg and each candle a unique pattern with an elegant metallic finish – perfect for modern Easter decoration. If you're looking for even more colours, surfaces and ideas for marbling, pop into the online shop and put together your next set for fresh spring projects.
